SUBJECT Whistle-Blower

DAVID SUSSKIND: The Federal Government has become bloated, wasteful and inefficient. Now, who are all those people and what do they do and where does our tax money go? My next guests know where at least some of the thousands of bodies are buried. Please meet them now

First Donald Lambro has been a Washington correspondent for many years, and he writes a twice-weekly column distributed by United Features Syndicate. Mr. Lambro is the author of "Fat city: How Washington Wastes Your Taxes."

Michael J. Malbin is a political scientist at the American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research. Mr. Malbin has written a book about congressional staffs titled "Unelected Representatives."

Congressional investigator Frank Silbe worked on the Watergate investigation. Mr. Silbe is now a staff director of the Investigations Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

And Charles Peters once worked for the government as Director of Evaluation for the Peace corps. Mr. Peters is now editor-in-chief of The Washington Monthly and he's written a book titled "How Washington Really Works."

[Note: Susskind does not always refer to guests by name; therefore, accurate identification is impossible.]

FRANK SILBE: One of the things I want to say is the whistle-blower thing. First of all, Ernie Fitzgerald is a man
